We notice that the gentlemen appointed a sub-committee by the recent meeting of stockowners at the Royal Hotel seem to strongly favour the idea that it is impossible to keep Australia clear of such diseases as foot-and-mouth, scab, and plague if the landing of stock from countries where these diseases exist is permitted. The chairman of the committee has drawn the attention of the public to the fact that six years ago he and other stockowners did as much as they could possibly do to keep the ports of this colony closed. They argued to the effect that no precautions at the ports could keep out disease, that Australians having good stock did not require fresh strains for their herds or flocks, and that dependence upon their own resources would be productive of a better result than any other course. These are all moot points, and in the view of some they are almost overcome by circumstances and experience. Prohibition of an almost strict character has not been without its trial. For more than five years the ports of Australia were closed against the exports of all places, save Tasmania. This term did not seem to bring out self-interest. It was in a financial sense extremely beneficial to the few stockowners who had formed herds of cattle by importations of British stock; but it is a significant fact that the former were the ports opened than importations were speedily resumed. Among the importers, there were many who had been the most influential advocates of the prohibition. The system of prohibition as conducted was extraordinarily lax. Pigs, dogs, and horses from any country could land without undergoing even a day's quarantine. Vessels with cattle and sheep on board kept as stores were allowed to occupy berths at our quays; but fortunately the port inspectors were qualified for their work. Diseases when it did come

Some time ago it was openly asserted that imported watches of a certain class were sold more cheaply in Melbourne, where there was a heavier duty, than in Sydney, where there was no duty at all. The statement was made by a protectionist, in advocacy of protection, and really meant, if it meant anything at all, that the payment of duties by importers on imported goods brought about a state of things under which the consumer or retail purchaser was enabled to obtain a better article for the money. It was obvious that the statement was either untrue, or to be explained away by circumstances prudently kept in the background. As to the truth of it, some light was given by Mr. COPELAND's narrative of personal experience the other day in the Assembly. The hon. member said:—"In Victoria there was a watch which was sold for £10, and with respect to jewellery. Recently he visited Melbourne, and went into a first-class jewellery establishment, where he priced a watch and brooch. After having obtained from the jeweller the very lowest price he would name for the articles, he (Mr. COPELAND) then remarked, 'But you have added 10 per cent. duty on the articles, which might be able to buy a better cheap article in Sydney.' The jeweller then remarked, 'Oh, if you live in Sydney I will take off the duty; you can buy the article from me and I will send it over in bond, less the duty.' The duty on those goods amounted to £3 or £3 6s. He, being a Sydney man, and his friend, who was a Melbourne man, went into the shop, were less than he, and could purchase for 50

We have received from Sir Samuel Smeal a copy of a set of papers, printed in England, apparently by order of Sir J. F. Bell, the Agent-General for New Zealand, relating to the Plymouth Emigration Depot. The matter seems to have arisen out of the case of the Thames, a vessel which was ordered to be sent to the depot for typhoid fever to place. The vessel made a second voyage with emigrants, and a second typhoid occurred. On the arrival of the vessel at New Zealand the Governor appointed a commission to inquire into the matter, and that commission, in its report, expressed its opinion that the Government regard the case of the Plymouth depot. Sir F. D. Bell therefore wrote to the Local Government Board, to the Board of Trade, and to the Agents-General of the other colonies, asking their opinions as to the state of the depot. The following extract from the report of Sir Samuel Smeal will show what are the real facts connected with the depot, and that, with the exception of minor defects, that have been pointed out in a recent article in this journal, there is very little to complain of. Sir Smeal says:—"I have much pleasure in complying with your request to report on my inspection of the depot. The management and condition of the depot. Having on several occasions visited and carefully inspected that establishment immediately previous to and at the time of the embarkation of emigrants for New South Wales, I can without hesitation state that the depot is well adapted for the purpose for which it was designed. The material arrangements are excellent, and there is an order, neatness, and perfect cleanliness about the establishment which do credit to the master and mistress in charge. The beds and bedding, which I have myself examined, are particularly clean. On the occasion of my visit, the depot was empty, and the materials for the depot for Queensland, and all the bedding had been changed for the reception of the people coming in to embark for New South Wales. On each occasion I conversed freely with the emigrants, and so compliant was made by them either with regard to the food or the accommodation, that I was enabled to form a very favourable and well satisfied opinion of their treatment."

INTERCOLONIAL NEWS.
(BY TELEGRAPH.)
(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

VICTORIA. MELBOURNE, MONDAY.
The Hon. G. D. Langridge, Commissioner of Customs, is going to pay a visit to the tobacco plantation on the King River, Gippsland, this week.
The Telephone Exchange Company, who have hitherto conducted their business at the Exchange buildings, Collins-street West, are about to erect large premises elsewhere, in order to accommodate their increasing business.
At the Hamilton Assizes to-day the Chief Justice passed sentence of death upon John Gray, convicted of murdering his wife. The Judge held out no hope of mercy, there being, he said, no extenuating circumstances in his favour. The prisoner had suggested a trial that he was provoked to commit the deed. William Cassidy and George Howell, for sheep-stealing, were sentenced to four years' imprisonment each.
Great damage has been done by a fire at Fairfield, Vinograd, Browne's Place, Rutherglen.
Mr. Candlish, district coroner, held an inquest to-day at Abbotsford, touching the death of Mr. T. Boland, late Inspector-General of Schools. Dr. Snowball said the cause of death was apoplexy, probably induced by some narcotic; the condition of the liver was such that a comparatively small dose of opium would have proved fatal. The eight previous to witness being called in deceased had complained of indigestion, and on the day he had taken a dose of chlorodyne. Mrs. Boland stated that deceased frequently took chlorodyne, and from the manner in which deceased spoke latterly she was sure that he had not contemplated suicide, and he anticipated a satisfactory issue out of his pecuniary troubles. The jury found that deceased died of apoplexy, occasioned by an overdose of chlorodyne taken by his own hand medicinally.
At the Central Criminal Court to-day, Thomas O'Grady, a farmer from the Hawthorn district, was found guilty of disposing of sheep, over the wool of which R. Goldsbrough and Co. had a lien, and the jury recommended him to mercy. His Honor said he would put the recommendation into effect, as it was probable the prisoner had been misled, and his judgment being impaired. He would only order him to pay a fine of £10, and to be detained till the amount was paid.
Constable McQuinn, who was brutally assaulted at Heolham by roughs in December last, is improving, but has not yet lost the sight of one of his eyes.
A man named Peter McQuinn, in giving evidence to-day in the Insolvency Court in regard to his former insolventcy, gave such prevarications, some of which the Judge sent him to goal for a fortnight.
A boy named Angus Gunnison, while playing near a creek at Coleraine, fell into deep water and was drowned.
It is reported that the Steam Navigation Board will hold an inquiry into the alleged row between the steamer Adelaide and Waterford down the bay on Thursday, when both steamers will have returned.
